Center-right lawmaker Jürgen Warborns subtle handshake with center-left René Repasi on the way out of the European Parliament hemicycle on Wednesday afternoon marked a nail in the coffin of Ursula von der Leyens coalition.

With that handshake, the European Peoples Party and the Socialists and Democrats groups' negotiators halted talks to find a last-minute agreement on a package to slash green corporate rules for businesses.

This is what I would interpret as the end of the negotiations, said Repasi after his chat with Warborn.
