Kazakhstan and Uzbekistan have reaffirmed their readiness to supply electricity to Kyrgyzstan during the autumn-winter period, Trend reports via the National Electric Grid of Uzbekistan.

The agreement was reached during a meeting of the heads of the water and energy agencies from Uzbekistan, Kazakhstan, and Kyrgyzstan, which took place in Almaty.

This arrangement will enable Kyrgyzstan to reduce its domestic electricity generation during the winter months and accumulate water in the Toktogul Reservoir. The stored water will then be released to Kazakhstan and Uzbekistan during the growing season to ensure a stable supply of irrigation for agricultural lands in the southern regions.
