Armenia is not currently considering leaving the Russian-led Collective Security Treaty Organization (CSTO), Deputy Foreign Minister Mnatsakan Safaryan said on Wednesday, addressing questions about Yerevans partial disengagement from the bloc.

Speaking to journalists in parliament, Safaryan said Armenias position has already been made clear: while Yerevan is not participating in CSTO summits or activities, it is also not blocking the organisations decision-making proces, News.Az reports, citing Armenian media.

Armenia conducts its foreign policy based on its own interests and in accordance with the situation that has emerged. A balancing policy of the Republic of Armenia has been announced, and decisions are made within its framework, he said.
