Bulgarian government says it is permanently withdrawing a controversial budget proposal after another night of major protests in Sofia and beyond.

Bulgaria's government announced on Tuesday that it is withdrawing its controversial budget plan after nationwide protests drew tens of thousands of people – the largest demonstrations the country has seen in decades.

An estimated 50,000 people took part in a rally in Sofia on Monday night, with organisers saying that another 50,000 joined demonstrations in other major cities.
