Uzbekistan has signed a major financing agreement with the Asian Infrastructure Investment Bank (AIIB), securing $500 million to support the countrys shift toward a low-carbon and climate-resilient economy.

The programme, approved in late November, is designed to strengthen environmental governance and accelerate national reforms in energy, industry and public administration.

According to AIIB, the funding will help Uzbekistan make its energy sector more transparent, introduce climate-oriented procurement standards and create clear rules for the generation and trading of carbon units.
