The progress made in ties with Beijing in recent months has shown China is more predictable than the US, Canadian Prime Minister Mark Carney said Friday after meeting Chinese President Xi Jinping.

Carney was addressing a news conference in Beijing, where he discussed improving ties with the world's second-largest economy amid tariffs imposed by the US.

Recalling his conversations with Chinese leaders, including Xi and Premier Li Qiang, over the past several months, Carney said: We spend a fair bit of time in all meetings (with the Chinese side) about the guardrails of the relationship: where we felt we could cooperate, where we had differences of opinion, [and] where we had differences in view in the system.
