Minister of Justice Srбуhi Galyan announced on Monday that the text of the proposed new Constitution, developed to replace the current one via referendum, is ready and will be discussed at the ruling Civil Contract party's board meeting, as well as by its parliamentary faction.

Galyan made the announcement during the first session of the ministry's public council.

The Constitutional Reform Council is working very actively. We hold meetings every week, and the text is ready, as I promised. However, I don't have any news about its publication yet, because it has been decided to also discuss the text within the Civil Contract party board and parliamentary faction. After that, a decision will be made regarding its publication, the minister said.
