The Guardian (1 April 2026)

Pakistan and China have released a joint five-part proposal for peace in the Middle East, after Pakistans foreign minister flew to Beijing on Tuesday to seek Chinese support for the countrys faltering efforts to negotiate an end to end the war.

The one-day meeting between Ishaq Dar and his Chinese counterpart, Wang Yi, came as Pakistan continues to push for the role of peacemaker between the United States and Iran, even as the war shows little sign of relenting.

According to a statement from Chinas foreign ministry, the trip was intended to strengthen cooperation between China and Pakistan on the ongoing conflict in Iran and make new efforts toward advocating for peace.
