Paris is also mulling the development of a new tank, according to a draft military planning law seen by POLITICO.

France will expand missile and drone stocks by up to 400 percent by 2030, according to a draft military planning law seen by POLITICO.

Ongoing conflicts in Ukraine and the Middle East have exposed how quickly munitions are consumed in high-intensity warfare. Now, Paris is earmarking billions of euros to boost existing stockpiles and replace air-defense missiles its air force has fired in the Gulf to fend off Iranian drone attacks.
