Armenian Prime Minister Nikol Pashinyan said Saturday that Yerevan does not need external guarantors to ensure peace with Azerbaijan, according to state news agency Armenpress.

Pashinyan criticized calls by political forces for Armenia to seek security guarantors, arguing that past reliance on such arrangements had proved unreliable.

One of those security guarantors, in fact, made a very open and transparent statement while on an official visit to Baku [] am referring to the president of Belarus [] that he participated in the preparatory work for the 44-day war, Pashinyan said.
