Bloc says there is 'sufficient' evidence of dumping and injury to EU industry, including falling prices, loss of market share.

The European Commission has launched an anti-dumping investigation into imports of primary alkaline manganese dioxide batteries from China following a complaint by German battery producer, according to an official notice published on Thursday.

The complaint by the Varta Consumer Batteries alleged that Chinese imports of cylindrical, non-rechargeable primary cells and batteries are being sold in the European Union at unfairly low prices, causing material injury to EU producers.
