Iranian Energy Minister Abbas Aliabadi and Armenian Minister of Territorial Administration and Infrastructure Davit Khudatyan held talks in Tehran on expanding bilateral energy cooperation.

The two sides stressed the need to accelerate the long-delayed project to build a third power transmission line between Iran and Armenia, which has been under development for 12 years, and agreed to continue working jointly on its implementation, Caliber.Az reports via Armenian media.

The Iranian side also raised the issue of constructing the Meghri hydropower plant, while the Armenian minister reaffirmed Yerevan's readiness to cooperate, citing previously reached agreements.
