Kazakhstans Constitutional Court launched audio and video versions of the new Constitution in both Kazakh and Russian on July 23 to improve access to legal information. A complete video version has also been published on the courts official social media platforms.

The initiative is designed to ensure broader and more equal access to the countrys fundamental law. The audio format provides an accessible option for people with visual impairments and for citizens who prefer to receive information through listening. The full text of the Constitution is available in written format, accompanied by the new audio version for public use.
