North Korean leader Kim Jong Un has pledged his invariable support for Russia and expressed confidence in Moscow's victory in what he described as a sacred war, state media reported Tuesday.

Kim made the remarks in a message sent Sunday to Russian President Vladimir Putin in response to Putin's congratulations on the 78th founding anniversary of the Democratic Peoples Republic of Korea (DPRK), according to the state-run Korean Central News Agency.

Being firmly convinced of the victory of the Russian Federation in the present sacred war to defend the national security interests and the international justice, I promise my invariable support to you, dear friend, and the fraternal Russian people, Kim said.
