Prime Minister Nikol Pashinyan said negotiations on a peace agreement between Armenia and Azerbaijan successfully concluded after the two sides moved away from a policy of mechanical reciprocity, a process he described as a ping-pong of reciprocal actions.

A lot is being discussed in Armenia about the so-called principle of reciprocity, that Armenia should take steps that others are taking, and others should take steps that are being taken in Armenia, he said on Thursday at the Comprehensive Security & Resilience 2026 international conference, organized by Yerevan-based think tank WGSA.
