Kyrgyzstan's civil aviation sector may be removed from the European Union's Air Safety List after nearly two decades of restrictions, President Sadyr Zhaparov announced Thursday.

"Today, our country is making a major historic leap: a modern, safe, and high-tech aviation industry is being developed, which will become one of the symbols of the renewed state," Zhaparov said in a statement.

He added that the country is developing aviation on its own initiative, investing billions of soms, acquiring new aircraft for domestic, regional, and international routes, and building new airports.
