The Armenian Foreign Ministry has responded to a report published by Carnegie Endowment for International Peace claiming that the United States is advancing its proposal to Armenia and Azerbaijan regarding the unblocking of regional infrastructures.

In response to a query from Armenpress, the foreign ministry said that various international partners have been making their proposals regarding the matter.

"The unblocking of transport infrastructure in the South Caucasus has been and remains an important priority for Armenia. As it is well known, Armenia has proposed its vision for regional connectivity, the Crossroads of Peace, which has already received positive reactions from a number of international partners. Furthermore, Armenia has proposed several solutions in line with this initiative, which could be acceptable to all involved parties. At the same time, various international partners regularly present their ideas on the normalization of Armenia-Azerbaijan relations, including the unblocking of transport infrastructure between the two countries. Discussions continue with all interested partners with the aim of achieving results that are beneficial and make use of the regions crossroad potential," foreign ministry spokesperson Ani Badalyan said.
